An early volume of the record of baptisms, marriages and burials in the parish of St. Peter's church, Oxford, contained some particulars regarding the Washband or Washburn family, but the book has been lost and after diligent inquiry the writer has been unable to find further account of the family records in this vicinity.

WILLIAM WASHBURN.

William Washburn, whose portrait accompanies this sketch, is one of the lawyers of New York who, while in the practice of law, loves letters. He wrote a novel entitled "A Fair Harvard" when fresh from college, which made him quite famous at the time. Later he published another called "The Unknown City," said city being New York. Two volumes of poems also owe their existence to him. In truth, when it comes to poetry, Mr. Washburn is at once on delectable grounds. He would rather write poetry, talk poetry and read poetry than do anything else in the world. To him there is no joy equal to the construction of choriambic verse.

He is also well known as a newspaper writer. He has written some of the brightest things in John Swinton's Paper, and his contributions to the newspapers of the country, through the different syndicates, have made him known to a large circle of readers.

He is a native of Marlboro, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard, yet thoroughly western in many respects. He is a good lawyer, a good talker, a good writer and a good friend, and quite good looking and also one of the best bred men in the world. He is also a close student of life. He knows New York and its many interesting phases better than any man not a newspaper reporter. His stories of New York life are true transcripts from nature.

Unlike a large portion of the rythmic guild, Mr. Washburn's is extremely modest about his achievements. He has a kindly and sunny nature, and is a great favorite with the literary people of that city.
